SECTION A

Bills and Acts of the Northern Ireland Assembly laid before Parliament under section 15 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998

Some Northern Ireland Bills and Acts are subject to negative procedure. Section 15 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 provides for a period of 20 sitting days beginning with the day upon which the Bill or Act is laid before Parliament within which Members may give notice, as the case may be, that the Bill shall not be submitted for Royal Assent or that the Act of the Assembly shall cease to have effect. Twenty signatories are required for a motion to be effective.

SECTION B

Treaties subject to negative resolution procedure

Some treaties are subject to negative procedure before they are ratified. Section 20 of the Constitutional Reform and Governance Act provides for a period of 21 sitting days (days on which both Houses sit), beginning with the sitting day after a copy of the treaty is laid before Parliament, within which either House may resolve that the treaty should not be ratified. There are provisions for the period to be extended and, if either House resolves that the treaty should not be ratified, a Minister may lay a statement indicating that he or she is of the opinion that the treaty should nevertheless be ratified (and why). If such a statement follows a resolution of the House of Commons that the treaty should not be ratified, this triggers a further 21-day period during which the House of Commons may come to the same resolution again.

(iii) Statutory Instruments laid under s.11 of the Public Bodies Act 2011

Instruments laid under s. 11 of the Public Bodies Act 2011 may not be made by a Minister unless they have been approved by both Houses of Parliament after the expiry of a specified period. Under s.11(4) of the Act, this period is 40 days, beginning with the day on which the instrument is laid before Parliament. Under s.11(5)(a), if either House so resolves within 30 days (beginning with the day on which the instrument is laid before Parliament), the period set under s.11 (4) is extended from 40 to 60 days. Under s.11(5)(b), if a Committee of either House recommends during the 30 day period that the 40 day period be extended to 60 days, the period is extended unless the House to which the recommendation is made resolves within the 30 day period to reject the recommendation. When reckoning the number of days expired under s.11, no account is taken of any time during which Parliament is dissolved or prorogued or during which either House is adjourned for more than four days.

SECTION G

Proposals for instruments subject to super-affirmative procedure

Some Acts require Ministers to lay proposals before Parliament for a certain length of time before laying draft orders taking account of any representations made during this period. This procedure is generally referred to as the “super-affirmative” procedure. This table also includes draft legislative reform orders (underlined) subject to super-affirmative procedure. The figures in the last column denote the number of days still to run including the day (when reckonable for this purpose) of publication of this list.

KEY
The statutory period does not include periods when:
*	both Houses are adjourned for more than four days;
†	Parliament is prorogued or dissolved;
	either House is adjourned for more than four days.
